Is your Canon device supported? Canon Drivers Utility works with devices made by a variety of major makers, including Sony, Canon, Nikon, and others. No matter which brand you own, you should be able to find your Canon drivers in the application. When it comes to drivers, there are two types. The first is the software drivers, which are the ones installed in your PC and which allow your device to work. These include graphics card drivers, audio drivers, and others. The second type of drivers is the hardware drivers. These are pieces of software which allow your device to work with certain hardware in it, including Wi-Fi cards, bluetooth cards, and others. They do this by removing the compatibility layer the hardware maker has placed on the device in order to make it work. That compatibility layer gives an idea of the level your device is. An entry level model will lack this layer, while a top-of-the-line model will work with this layer in order to ensure that it can work with all the features of your device. With Canon Drivers Utility you can ensure that the compatibility layer is removed, which means that your device can run smoothly. There are times when some drivers are outdated and consequently Canon Drivers Utility may fail to detect them properly. However, if that is the case, simply click on the "Click here to fix" button on the bottom left corner of the program. It should open up a menu in which you can click on "Yes, update drivers" or "No, forget drivers." Once this is done, click on "Yes" and let the application do its work. The present invention relates to a method for detecting radiation in a positron emission tomography apparatus, and to a positron emission tomography apparatus having a detector for detecting gamma radiation and in which a contrast agent is used for the measurement. In a positron emission tomography apparatus for biological diagnostics an examination subject, in particular a patient is injected with a positron-emitting radionuclide. With the aid of the radiation, a positron is emitted which shortly after passing through the subject passes through a scintillator. The scintillator emits light in dependence of the received radiation in such a way that the original position of the radiation is retraced. This is detected by detectors and the detected light in each detector is digitized in order to generate an image. A positron emission tomography apparatus typically comprises a gantry having a stationary rotary ring on which are mounted a plurality of detector heads, each of which comprises at least one layer of detectors. The detectors for detecting the gamma radiation are typically composed of a scintillator that emits light in dependence of the radiation detected and a converter element, in which the light emitted by the scintillator is converted into a signal which is amplified, digitized and stored. It is desired, for example, for different organs of the subject to be better detected in a positron emission tomography apparatus. A contrast agent is used in order, for example, for achieving a more optimal delineation. The contrast agent is injected into the blood stream of the subject to be examined and causes the radiation in the region in question to be markedly more visible in the detection. In a

He is not a mere theory to them, but the very living God in all his fullness." -- R.C. Sproul, "Living In God's Presence" What does it take to discover joy in Christ? What is it that causes a person to long to find God and to walk closely with him in prayer? What brings a person to a place where his or her heart passionately desires to know the God of love? What is it that draws us to the cross of Jesus Christ? The next session of the Rainmaker Conversation Series will answer these questions and more. This event, entitled, "Discovering Joy in God," will be taking place on Wednesday, December 6 at the North Alabama Baptist Church in Huntsville. The topic of the series is "Discovering Joy in Christ, the Great God of Love."
